Save the Babies.

INFANT MORTALITY is something frightful. We can hardly realize that of all the children born in civilized countries, twenty-two per cent., or nearly one-quarter, die before they reach one year; thirty-seven per cent., or more than one-third, before they are five, and one-half before they are fifteen!
We do not hesitate to say that a timely use of Castoria would save a majority of these precious lives. Neither do we hesitate to say that many of these infantile deaths are occasioned by the use of narcotic preparations. Drops, tinctures and soothing syrups sold for children's complaints contain more or less opium or morphine. They are, in considerable quantities, deadly poisons. In any quantity, they stupefy, retard circulation and lead to congestions, sickness, death. Castoria operates exactly the reverse, but you must see that it bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher. Castoria causes the blood to circulate properly, opens the pores of the skin and allays fever.
Genuine Castoria always bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher.

SOLD CHEAP MILK IN "HORLICK MILK" JAR

W. W. Pierce, manager at Park and Washington, pleaded guilty before Justice of the Peace Bell to selling a cheaper grade of malted milk from jars in which "Horlick's Malted Milk" had been blown and when Horlick's Malted Milk was called for. He was fined $25 and costs. The complaint was signed by Food Commissioner Bailey, who is determined to stop the practice of substituting one brand of goods for another without notification of the substitution being made.—Oregon Sunday Journal, Portland, Oregon.

Brenlin Window Shades

—Look much better, last longer!

See that this mark—BRENLIN—is perforated along the edge of all your window shades. (You can't see it unless you look closely.) It is a guarantee that these shades are made without the "filling" that makes other shades streak, wrinkle, fade and show unsightly "pin holes"—that they will always hang straight and smooth, and outlast the ordinary shade several times.
BRENLIN is made in many artistic tones and in Brenlin Duplex—colored one side, white the other. Come in and let us show you samples and quote prices.

THURSDAY EVE'G., SEP. 12, 1912.

FALSE IN ONE THING, FALSE IN ALL.

Theodore Roosevelt publicly announced, November 8, 1904, and subsequently in substance reiterated:

On the 4th of March next I shall have served three and a half years, and this three and a half years constitute my first term. The wise custom which limits the President to two terms regards the substance and not the form, and UNDER NO CIRCUMSTANCES WILL I BE A CANDIDATE FOR OR ACCEPT ANOTHER NOMINATION.

ROOSEVELT'S VINDICATION.

The Bull Moose press quotes approvingly Colonel Roosevelt's famous "vindication" of himself from the accepted Standard Oil gouffer precipitated by Boss Flinn as follows:

The charge against Penrose was a direct charge. This charge was not merely that he took $225,000 from the Standard Oil Company, but that while a member of a committee of the Senate, which was formed to investigate industrial affairs in the United States, he was in constant communication with Archbold on the subject, and that he submitted to Archbold for his approval in advance a copy of the report of the commission. If these statements are facts, of course Penrose is unfit to represent the people in the United States Senate, and the testimony against him is direct.

If Penrose is not because he accepted $225,000 of the Standard Oil money for political campaign expenditures in 1904, and in exchange therefor gave Archbold a copy of the Industrial Commission's report, what shall we say of Roosevelt, who at the same time "could not afford to do without Morgan's influence," who assured H. H. Harriman whose quarter of a million contribution he sought and received that "You and I are practical men," and who, after the refusal of the Standard Oil concern to contribute another $150,000 in addition to the $100,000 already contributed and expended, was consoled with the thought that the United States Steel Corporation's friends would more than make up the deficiency, and who subsequently betrayed as much friendship for the Steel corporation as he did enmity for the Oil corporation?

It was customary and lawful at that time to solicit and receive campaign contributions from corporations, and it was no crime on the part of Colonel Roosevelt and his campaign managers to accept money from either the Standard Oil Company or the Steel Corporation or the railroad systems represented by Harriman, nor was it any greater crime for Senator Penrose to accept a similar contribution from the Standard Oil Company; but there is no escaping the inevitable conclusion that the conviction of Penrose on the Roosevelt charge is the conviction of Roosevelt on the same charge.

The chief criticism, honesty and candor have to make is that Colonel Roosevelt and his friends have been playing the part of hypocrites by pretending political virtues they did not possess and trying to point an criminal practices they themselves freely followed.

But the Bull Moose movement is 29 per cent pure.

THE PAID DEPUTY.

The official organ of the United Mine Workers serves notice that the union miners will "never again submit to the rule of men responsible to nobody but the men who hire them," meaning the guards employed and deputized by the authorities as peace officers, to guard mine property and protect in their right those who elect to work.

Strikers should not be asked to submit to such authority, nor should coal operators or any other employers of labor be asked to provide such armed guards for the protection of their property and their employes from molestation by mobs of strikers.

It is the duty of the government, local, State and National, to provide that protection without charge to the operators or manufacturers or other persons whose lawful rights are threatened with invasion by lawless men.

We are taught that government is a compact of society whereby men gives up certain of his natural rights, chiefly the right of might, in exchange for protection in all his lawful rights.

Governments are instituted among men to furnish such protection, and taxes are levied to support such governments.

The coal interests pay a liberal share of such taxation and they are entitled to protection from the State in the exercise of their lawful rights. They should not be obliged to defend their own strongholds of industry in the same manner the barons of old were compelled to defend their castles of stone. We have advanced in civilization since then.

We heartily agree with the United Mine Workers Journal that there should be no more paid deputies or armed guards in strike districts. They should be ordered by representatives of the government provided by the government for upholding the power of the government, and they should be armed before men are killed and maimed and before property is destroyed or set afire.

OUR INDUSTRIAL ADVANTAGES.

The officials of the company which [illegible] the location of a tenth [illegible] plant have discovered that Connellsville possesses excellent transportation facilities and favorable freight rates. The chamber of commerce should not permit this fact to be forgotten in considering the advantages of Connellsville as a manufacturing site.

The fuel cost of the plant is no longer the most serious question which confronts the manufacturer: its efficiency and the economy of its operation are more important considerations and low operative costs are calculated not for a few but for many years. Hence the observation in these columns recently that the advantages of cheap natural gas are uncertain and are not to be compared with the more substantial advantage of cheaper freight rates that must reasonably continue through many years.

The nature of the new company's wants has not been disclosed to the public, but as stated heretofore the Chamber of Commerce should endeavor to meet any reasonable conditions, and in view of our manifest advantages as a manufacturing center these demands should not be extravagant.

The man who steal another's wife, and kills him for resenting it, can be properly disciplined only by the rope's end.

The fish dynamiter is being brought to book in Somerset county. It is a pity the Youghiogheny river country did not stop his work years ago.

A near-Masontown merchant is now convinced of the value of advertising. It brought him a wife. Advertising will not only bring a wife, but it will also bring customers.

We seem to be passing through another period of railroad wrecks most of which are due to defective tracks. It looks as if the railroads did not buy new rails too soon.

The Connellsville region railroads have raised their local passenger rates within the State of Pennsylvania from 2 to 2½ cents per mile and lowered the interstate local rates from 3 to 2½ cents. The equalization is equitable. The former rate was discriminatory.

The confiding Italian who requested a German to count his money and got a roll of paper in exchange is probably convinced that the danged Dutch are not so dumb.

It is to be hoped that the United Presbyterians of Connellsville will soon be united in fact as well as in name.

The West Virginia strike will be probed by a State Commission appointed by Governor Glasscock, but the report will probably not be ready in time to vote this fall.

The railroads are trying to obey the working conditions imposed by the Higher Law of the Interstate Commerce Commission. They find it awkward, not to say unhandy, but they must be credited with an honest effort.

A New York lawyer is accused of choking a woman client to death to get her money. This is not only unlawful but unprofessional. Out here in Western Pennsylvania, the lawyers don't have to choke their clients to death.

DEMOCRATIC TESTIMONY ON EVILS OF FREE TRADE

Pittsburg Gazette Times.

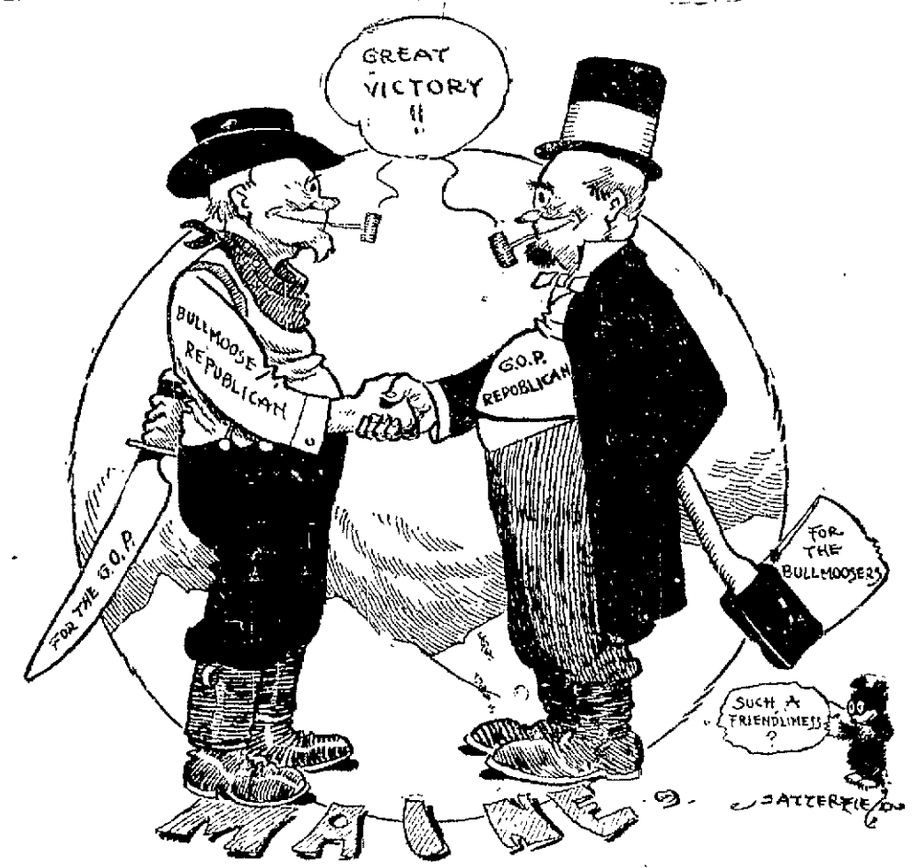

William MacCorkle was the last Democratic Governor of West Virginia. Republican national policies made the State industrially great and prosperous and Republican. Consequently Governor MacCorkle has had no Democratic successor, and Democrats in West Virginia hardly a look-in, until the Congressional elections of two years ago. All the time, however, the former Governor was striving for the success of his party. As one result of the elections of 1910 his law partner was sent to the United States Senate to vote for Democratic policies. Governor MacCorkle was a delegate to the Democratic Convention held this year at Baltimore and voted for the platform which declares that Protection of American industries is all wrong and unconstitutional. It is apparent that the last Democratic Governor of West Virginia has remained Democratic and kept himself bomb-proof against the evidence of the progress of events that Protection is the right policy. Consequently it is not biased testimony that he now gives us to what Free Trade has done for Great Britain.

Governor MacCorkle has just returned from a brief visit to Great Britain. "England," he observed to a reporter in New York, just after landing from the Mauretania, "is in a state of decay. You see signs of it on every side. Passing through Wales on the train, I was struck by the evidences of retrogression in the iron and steel industry. Everywhere you saw foundries and factories with their roofs falling in and no apparent attempt to make repairs. In Birmingham, which we Americans usually consider the most bustling of all British towns, I was struck with the tumble-down look of the factories, and Liverpool's state was appalling."

In spite of this, and notwithstanding that it was an approximation of the same condition in the United States under Democratic rule which put the Democratic party out of business at the election of 1896, Governor MacCorkle has come home, not to work against destruction of Protection to American industries, but to devote himself to putting vitality into the Democratic Tariff plank. Apparently he fails to perceive the intimate relationship between Tariffs and national prosperity which his frank report on conditions in Great Britain will reveal to others. England is decaying as Governor MacCorkle says, and it is because her statesmen persist in their Free Trade policy in the face of conclusive evidence that the policy is proving fatal to national and individual prosperity. The same blunder that the British statesmen are making, Governor MacCorkle and the Democratic nominee for President would have the American people make.

Governor MacCorkle has performed a notable public service in stating so unreservedly the fruit of his observation in the country which stands among nations as the champion of a national Free Trade policy. Persons who do not wish to sink to the level of British decay will vote against the candidate and platform championed by the former Governor of West Virginia. It is a pity that he cannot see the truth which he so clearly reveals to others.

Women

From Forty-Five to Fifty Are Much Benefited by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

The "change of life" is a most critical period in a woman's existence, and the anxiety felt by women as it draws near is not without reason.

When her system is in a deranged condition, she may be predisposed to apoplexy, or congestion of some organ. At this time, also, cancers and tumors are more liable to form and begin their destructive work.

Such warning symptoms as sense of suffocation, hot flashes, headaches, backaches, dread of impending evil, timidity, sounds in the ears, palpitation of the heart, sparks before the eyes, irregularities, constipation, variable appetite, weakness and inquietude, and dizziness, are promptly heeded by intelligent women who are approaching the period in life when woman's great change may be expected.

These symptoms are calls from nature for help. The nerves are crying out for assistance and the cry should be heeded in time.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is prepared to meet the needs of women's system at this trying period of her life. It invigorates and strengthens the female organism and builds up the weakened nervous system. It has carried many women safely through this crisis.

Mrs. Estella Gillispie

ONE CASE OUT OF MANY TO PROVE OUR CLAIMS.

St. Anne, Ill.—"I was passing through the change of life and I was a perfect wreck from female troubles. I had a displacement and bearing down pains, weak fainting spells, dizziness, then numb and cold feelings. Sometimes my feet and limbs were swollen. I was irregular and had so much backache and headache, was nervous, irritable and was despondent. Sometimes my appetite was good but more often it was not. My kidneys troubled me at times and I could walk only a short distance.

"I saw your advertisement in a paper and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I was helped from the first. At the end of two months the swelling had gone down, I was relieved of pain, and could walk with ease. I continued with the medicine and now I do almost all my housework. I know your medicine has saved me from the grave and I am willing for you to publish anything I write to you, for the good of others."—Mrs. ESTELLA GILLISPIE, R.F.D. No. 4, Box 34, St. Anne, Illinois.

COKE CONTRACTS FOR COMING YEAR ON WAITING LIST

A Prospective Price of $2.75 But Disposition to Await Events.

PRESENT PRICES FIRMLY HELD

Curious Feature of Market is Buying by Furnaces Already Covered by Contract—Foundry Consumers Disposed to Contract Into New Year.

From The Weekly Courier.

PITTSBURG, September 11.—Last week's advance in prompt furnace coke has been easily held, although sales have not been as heavy, aggregating probably 5,000 to 6,000 tons, at $2.30 and $2.35, prices which there seems to be no difficulty in obtaining. A sale of 5,000 tons on contract for delivery during the fourth quarter is reported this afternoon at $2.40. The strike troubles in West Virginia have had a stiffening effect on the coke market. Coal shipments to western by-product plants whose coke is used for furnace purposes have been curtailed and by-product production cut down correspondingly. Martial law in West Virginia promises to make better coke business in the Connellsville region.

The heavy rains of the past two or three weeks have decreased shipments from certain plants and have made blast furnaces short here and there, bringing a demand into the market from unexpected quarters. The curious feature of the past 30 days or more has been that the buying has been largely by furnaces already covered by contracts, rather than by furnaces not covered. Indeed, appearances are that there is not as much uncovered tonnage among furnaces in operation as was thought. The demand of the next few months is likely to come chiefly from consumers who do not receive full shipments on their contracts, and from furnaces now idle getting into blast.

There is considerable discussion in the trade as to contracts for furnace coke for the first half of 1913, but it can hardly be said that there are any definite negotiations on as yet. The two parties would be found far apart if they undertook to negotiate. Furnacemen have not become accustomed to prices now ruling, being disposed to regard them as exceptional and not altogether in keeping with pig iron prices, which, while they have advanced, have not advanced nearly as much as in previous times when coke crossed the $2 line. On the other hand, operators, so far as they have made up their minds at all, are disposed to hold out for a sizable advance above the present market, say a price of $2.75. They are content to wait until the furnacemen are more in line with their ideas, for they are looking for further and considerable advances in pig iron. A distinct point in favor of this waiting game is the fact that the market has actually opened at an advance for next year as compared with this year. Several sales of foundry iron have been made in local territory at 50 cents advance for first quarter over what the same furnaces would do for this year. In other pig iron districts the same thing has occurred, and Southern iron has regularly been selling at about 50 cents advance for late delivery over early delivery, so that the tendency in the pig iron market may be regarded as established.

There has been some negotiating on foundry coke contracts beginning October 1, as a few of such contracts expire at that time, and in this case the consumers are disposed to contract into next year, rather than buy for only the last three months of this year.

The market stands quotable as follows:

Prompt furnace	$2.20 @ $2.25
Contract furnace (nom.)	@ $2.25
Prompt foundry	$2.40 @ $2.50
Contract foundry	$2.40 @ $2.75

The general iron and steel trade has shown a slight improvement in the past week. Specifications appear to be somewhat heavier for finished steel products, although even in July and August they ran well ahead of shipments, while in pig iron there is quite a general tendency on the part of furnaces to advance asking prices. Transactions have been light in the past week and it remains to be seen whether the tendency to advance asking prices is going to result in a general advance in the actual markets. Bessemer iron, however, is quotable at an advance of 25 cents, on light sales. The market is quotable in general as follows: Bessemer, $15; Basic, $14 @ $14.25; Malleable, $14 @ $14.50, No. 2 Foundry $14.25 @ $14.75. Forge $13.75 @ $14.00, f. o. b. Valley furnaces, 90 cents higher delivered Pittsburg.

SOMERSET, Sept. 12.—Yesterday afternoon in criminal court a jury rendered a verdict of "not guilty" and placed two-thirds of the costs on the prosecutors and one-third on the defendants, in the case of C. The prosecution of road supervisors of Lincoln township was settled on condition that Samuel J. Maust, one of the supervisors, resign. The Grand Jury returned true bills in the following cases: Frank Ringer, carrying concealed weapons, H. P. Burnsworth, prosecutor; R. Roe, C. M. Garvin and Patrick Boyle, selling liquor without license, Philip S. Rhoads; Patrick Boyle, Jacob Wafegever and C. M. Garvin, selling liquor; Harry Fritz, Frederick S. Clair and Isaac Gashaw, supervisors of Jenner township, neglecting public roads, Frank E. Shaffer, constable. William and Emma Abell, charged with assault and battery, by Emma H. Whitmore, of West Salisbury. The defendants are said to be fugitives from justice.

Constables have returned to court the supervisors of the following districts for neglecting public roads: Lartimer, Addison, Shade, Allegheny, Summit, Elk Lick and Milford townships. The constables of Casselman and Hooversville boroughs also filed complaints against the Council and Burgess in which they state the streets and alleys of those towns are in bad condition.

The following new divorce proceedings have been instituted: John A. Patton against Annie E. Patton, Michael Rouyces against Mary Rouyces, and Bertha Nelson against Harry Nelson.

Judge James Ingram, of Greene county, has forwarded to Prothonotary Aaron F. Helple an opinion in which he refuses a new trial in the case of Alexander Rhoads against the Quemahoning Coal Company. Judge J. W. Reed, of Clearfield county, has ordered a new trial of the case of R. L. Walter and others against agree to accept $225 for their claim.

"THE HAIRS OF YOUR HEAD ARE NUMBERED"

There is a great deal of truth in the old saying.

Roots die, vitality gives out. The hair begins to turn grey.

This is particularly unfortunate as we are all living in an age when to LOOK young means to fill the YOUNG and IMPORTANT positions. Old fogies go to the background.

If you should begin to chalk down every day of your life, the exact number of hairs that turn grey, you would be surprised and soon learn that "The Grey Hairs of Premature Old Age" come on very quickly, if you neglect them.

Begin to count, and Use—

THE MYSTERY OF THE CAUSEWAY

"Perhaps it would be best if you explained"

We remained where we were with the fence between us, while he told his story

"It was on Monday afternoon sir" said Jake Warner addressing Addington Peace of the Criminal Investigation Department of Scotland Yard "I was crossing the public path that runs near the other end of the lake when I fell in with a middle-aged spectacled gentleman who was strolling along with a tin collecting case on his back such as botanists use. We fell to talking, and one thing led to another until when I turned off down to the lake to see after my ducks he came with me. He never meant no harm as I know of but I wish to all I have never to have seen him"

"What was he like?" asked the inspector

A short fellow with a brown full beard and a slight stutter. Very pleasant he was to talk to but that is outside the point sir as you will see. We walked down the causeway and just before the pavilion what should we come on [illegible] dead birds all with their heads bitten off. It made me wild for the foxes have been [illegible] me cruel this spring. Sir William never would have one shot though he had given up hunting many years. As for the young master I couldn't [illegible] for I [illegible] never set eyes upon him.

To stranger he sympathized [illegible] I told him my trouble. How they [illegible] keeper [illegible] lot of wild ducks [illegible] of foxes [illegible] if I know I said. He [illegible] that a fox who would kill ducks [illegible] that was as bad as a man [illegible] old vixen won't let me get at her [illegible] of her [illegible] mind to [illegible] a spring gun for her on the causeway here.

"Bless [illegible] said he that fellow [illegible] He threw back his head and [illegible] the certainty of it [illegible] his words. After that he sobered down and began talking more serious. Did I really understand how to set a spring gun? I told him [illegible] and then he explained how he had a friend from India who had often used them to kill jackals. Whether I did right or wrong the fact is that I agreed to set the gun when he sent me the instructions.

"Well sir his letter arrived yesterday morning with careful little plans and all. I loaded my gun with buck [illegible] and carried it down to the causeway shortly after [illegible]. I had [illegible] the ducks each day and [illegible] that old vixen. I fixed the gun with a thread of strong cotton across the path and round the trigger. You may think I took a wicked risk but I had hardly ever known any one to pass along the causeway in the day time, far less at night. Yet for safety's sake I meant to take it up again at dawn.

I walked home and sat smoking my pipe for a while. But I was worried and disturbed. I couldn't get it from my mind that there was danger in that spring gun left to itself as it were. Even if I tracked the old vixen some one might hear the shot and find the hole. A dead fox would make me a marked man amongst all the hunting people about. I didn't like that thought neither. At last I couldn't stand it no longer and set off back to the causeway. I was more than half way when I heard the shot, and that set me running. When I saw the policeman I was mightily afraid he would be finding the vixen dead. That's why I lied to him."

"I know the rest, Warner," said Peace "but I want a few details. Did you see any sign of another man?"

"No sir"

"Where was Sir Andrew hit?"

"The chest, sir, he got it full in the chest."

"So I understood. A curious elevation of the muzzle eh? Did you expect a fox over five feet high?"

He brought out the words with a snap but the keeper answered him without hesitation

"That is the point sir" he said. "That is why I am not responsible for the master's death. I set the gun at a level of eight inches from the ground which I reckoned would take the fox about the shoulder. Some one altered the elevation of the muzzle after I had gone"

The second forked stick that supported the gun was in the mud. Might it not have sunk under the weight and thus raised the muzzle?

"No, sir. I had pushed it through the mud down to the gravel. It was a good foot deeper when I went to look at it. A man must have used great force to get it so far through the gravel."

"What became of the gun?"

"After they carried Sir Andrew away, I must have gone off my head for awhile. What would they say to me for setting such a trap for my master? That was the only thing I could think about. I ran back and pulled up the sticks and carried away the gun to the cottage here."

"But you saw the policeman arrest the man whom we may presume to be the murderer?"

"Yes sir, but I was too wild to reason it out. I made up my mind this morning to tell them all about it at the inquest. That is the truth"

"Did you use the punt last night?"

"No sir, it must have been the man that was caught. I missed her this morning and after a search found her in the reeds near the island where she had drifted. Though I don't see how you could have known anything about the punt, sir."

"The iron shod pole had chipped the landing stage. The other man had ferried himself across rather than use the causeway. And now please fetch me the plans and the gun."

When Warner returned Peace slipped the envelope into his pocket and examined the weapon with great care snapping the lock twice.

"You had eased the trigger eh?"

"Yes sir. I thought a light pull would be best, so I oiled and loosened the screws"

The little man handed it back to him and turned away, staring over the lake towards the distant woodlands with his hands clasped behind his back.

"That fellow, sir—he must have done it don't you think?" asked the under keeper.

"So it would seem Warner" said Addington Peace over his shoulder.

It was eleven o'clock on the following day when Peace was announced. I was sitting in the garden of my friend's cottage smoking my pipe and reading the paper. From within the villa came the sound of whistling that told of my host working at his Academy picture.

"Why Peace," I said "what brings you here?"

He seated himself on a corner of the garden bench and lit a cigarette.

"I went to London last night," he told me. "And as I had to pass your friend's house on the way from the station to Airlie Hall I thought I would call in and see you."

"Any further news?"

"I have had an interesting visit. The botanist with the beard has stepped into a leading part in our little tragedy, Mr Phillips."

"Do you mean—"

"Yes I believe him to be the murderer of Sir Andrew Cheyne."

"Then the man under arrest is innocent"

"That scarcely describes him—but he had no hand in this crime"

"Confound you and your riddles" I said. "Where is the murderer? Have you caught him?"

"There is a carriage at the door. If you care to come along perhaps I may be able to show him to you."

It was a swift horse from the stables of Airlie Hall and we covered the ground quickly. There was little talk between us. Twelve had struck when we stepped out at the overhanging porch of the old gray mansion and walked through into the library that overlooked the terrace and the lake. By the window, twisting his cap in his nervous fingers stood Jake Warner. Peace nodded him a good morning and then slipped away with a word of apology.

"The detective gentleman wired that he wanted to see me" said Warner anxiously. "Do you know why sir?"

I told him no and he dropped into an uneasy silence. I amused myself by walking from picture to picture, for the walls were hung with splendid portraits—Gainsborough, Lely and Romney—it was a veritable exhibition of these great masters. At last the door opened and the little man appeared glancing from one to the other of us with his shrewd, observant eyes.

"Will you follow me, if you please?" he said.

We tramped up the great staircase a wide sweep of polished oak, where a dozen men could have walked abreast and so down a high roofed passage into a majestic bedroom. In the center stood a venerable four-post bedstead. The columns that supported the canopy were finely carved and over the head was a faded coat of arms pictured in the needlework of two hundred years ago. The lattice windows were open. From without came the faint piping of the nestling birds.

Upon the bed lay something covered with white sheeting.

Peace walked up to it and paused staring hard at the keeper who stood beside me. Then with a gentle hand he lifted the sheet. On the pillow lay the head of an elderly man dark and full bearded.

Warner stepped back, clutching my arm.

"It's the botanist" he stammered. "What is he doing here? Was it him as killed my master sir?"

"Yes" said the little detective, "he killed Sir Andrew Cheyne."

For a moment he stooped, busying himself about the head. With a gentle pull he lifted the heavy beard away. It was a face younger by a score of years that lay upon the pillows, a face handsome after its fashion, though deep lined with evil days and ways.

"Sir Andrew himself," cried Warner, with a sob of terror.

"That is also true," said Inspector Addington Peace reverently replacing the white sheet.

It was an hour afterwards that Peace gave me the details. We were leaning against the stone balustrade of the terrace looking over the lake to the pleasant park land beyond. The breeze-swept rushes that marked the line of the causeway, the gables of the island pavilion that peered above the foliage lay to our right framed in the rippling blue of the mere.

"My first important discovery" he said "was a strand of pack thread tied to a young sapling at the spot where the body of Sir Andrew was found. On the other side of the path was a narrow hole between the slabs of granite where a peg had lately been driven in. The rushes about it were broken here and there. The conclusion of a spring gun was obvious, and the reason suggested by the track of foxes along the edge of the reeds. Was the death an accident after all? If so what business had the stranger under arrest—Fenton I now find is his name—upon the island at so late an hour?

"My conversation with the keeper gave me some interesting results. It was plainly murder, and no accident. Some one had raised the muzzle of the gun so that it might kill a man and not a fox. Some one had expected a visitor to the island that night against whom he desired to revenge himself. Was Fenton guilty? The evidence against him seemed almost conclusive. He had admitted you will remember that he had an appointment with Sir Andrew. Yet after he had set the trap, why had he continued to risk discovery by loitering about the causeway? How had he known that the spring gun was there at all? Why had he brought a loaded revolver? Why had he borrowed the punt and reached the island by so unexpected a manner? Was he also afraid of some one or some thing? My mind began to turn from him to the second stranger, the botanist with the collecting case. He at least had information about the setting of the gun.

"There was still a further point. Sir Andrew had been shot full in the chest. If he had been walking down the causeway he would have been hit in the side. How was that?

"Yesterday morning after I sent you away I walked into the village to make inquiries. They have few visitors and the landlord of the inn remembered the bearded naturalist. He had only once visited the place driving over from the station and disappearing for several hours. A hot tempered man, nervous and excitable—so he described him. When the cab was late he had broken out in a foreign tongue. That was all he knew of him.

"I caught the 3 15 to London and found Scotland Yard in the possession of some additional details. Sir Andrew had been in town for a fortnight living very quietly at a small hotel off Piccadilly. He had no servant with him. He had been a wild extravagant lad they told me and when his uncle had tired of paying his bills he had tried the stage got deeper into debt and finally fled to the Continent where he lived on a small allowance that the old man made him. All this struck me as curious. The rake had indeed reformed if he heralded his accession to great wealth by dropping a servant and living quietly in a small hotel. Had he other reasons than economy?

"I visited the hotel that night. Sir Andrew had received few visitors, the porter told me. I described the botanist, without success. Then I tried Fenton. The porter recognized my description at once. He had called twice the first time shortly after Sir Andrew's arrival the second time on Tuesday evening. The waiter who had taken him up to the baronet's sitting room told me that the first interview had been long and that they had quarreled violently on the stairs.

"'You shall never so much as see the place. If you go there before settling with me I communicate with the police at once.' He remembered some such threat shouted by Fenton on leaving. The second interview had been short, and, so far as he knew, friendly.

"I made a careful search of Sir Andrew's room. It was there that I solved the problem of the mystery, for in his dressing case was an old makeup box no doubt a survival from his days upon the stage and in the box was a full brown beard."

"And so he was the botanist?" I said with a shiver.

"Yes, Mr Phillips, he was the botanist."

There was silence between us for a while. I looked up at the splendid front of the ancient hall, and then across the lawns, over the sparkling mere to the park and the forest lands beyond.

"Was it for this?" I asked with a wave of the hand.

"Yes" said Peace. "I believe it to have been for Airlie Hall that he tried to kill Fenton. Heaven knows what dismal scandal the man held over him but it was probably sufficient to drive Sir Andrew from England for ever. From inquiries that we have made it appears that Fenton had been living on Sir Andrew for over two years. It was undoubtedly a bad case of blackmail. The young man, on hearing of his uncle's death, gave his persecutor the slip, and crossed to London. Fenton followed and discovered him at his hotel. Probably he demanded a large sum, which was refused him. Whereupon he declared that the baronet should never so much as see Airlie Hall unless he paid and left the young man with that threat upon him.

"For days Sir Andrew stayed sulking in his rooms. He was a man of violent temper and unscrupulous past. Heaven knows what schemes of revenge he hatched in his rage and despair. Finally, on Monday last he risked discovery, disguised himself in the beard and went down to see the old place again. His meeting with the keeper was a chance, and their talk of spring guns an equal accident. But the suggestion gave the baronet an idea. 'A spring gun for a fox'—you remember his words as Warner told us. He laughed with hysterical joy at a means that would rid him of his enemy so simply and certainly. He made the excuse of the Indian friend and saw Fenton again on Tuesday, giving him an appointment on the island at eleven o'clock on the following Thursday night and at the same time promising to pay him what he asked at the meeting. By the last post on Wednesday he sent the plans to Warner in disguised handwriting and under a false name and address.

"Fenton suspected this sudden acquiescence. The scamp knew to what a state of impotent fury he had brought his victim. He took a revolver with him, and having spied out the ground, crossed by the punt instead of approaching the rendezvous by the causeway. Also he came an hour and more before he was expected.

"Perhaps you now understand the plan. Sir Andrew intended to alter the gun and leave for the station before ten. Fenton would be killed at eleven and the blame rest on Warner. No one could suspect the young baronet who would be in the train at the time of the accident.

"Sir Andrew found the trap lifted the gun off the supporting props and drove the outer one a foot deeper into the ground. I could see the marks of his feet, where he had stood while he pushed and twisted the stick through the clay. He replaced the gun, which would now be at an angle to hit a man in the chest or neck. He stepped back looking to see if there was a sign of lurking death to alarm a passer by.

"What happened I can only guess. He may have slipped on the old slabs. But it was enough that he touched the thread and the trigger oiled and eased by Warner jarred off at once. It was in a manner suicide."

"So that is the explanation," I said, when he had ended.

"It is partly guess work of course," Peace told me, "but I think you will find that I am not far wrong when Fenton's trial comes on and to save his neck he makes a clean breast of his share in the business."

RISKY POSTAL SERVICE.

In Russia the Government Opens All Suspicious Packages

Our own service of mails is well organized. There is little doubt in the mind of the average person that when he posts a letter it will reach its destination.

But in other lands he might well fear for its safety. In Russia for instance any letter or parcel that is regarded with suspicion is immediately opened and its contents noted. A clever machine gums it up again so that the recipient does not know that it has been tampered with.

In Lapland the mails are carried in sledges drawn by reindeers. In the wilds of the Caucasus the postman holds a post of danger. He must be protected against brigands and against the weather for he often has to climb mountains more than 12 000 feet high.

Asiatic Russia which is apt to be marshy has the buffalo post and of course the progress made is very slow. Buffaloes are more powerful than oxen and they are also used in Siberia for carrying the mail.

Other postmen in foreign lands are the swimming postman of India and the skiing letter carrier of the Andes. For the latter place the Argentine government specially imports Norwegians.—Exchange.

Mexico's Smoking Mountain

In 1897 I climbed two volcanoes in Mexico Popocatepetl or the smoking mountain about 17 800 feet and Orizaba the former the most famous because within view from Mexico City and thus a source of especial pride and admiration to the inhabitants who have been loath to believe that any other of their mountains could be higher. Popo has a really splendid crater about half a mile across and 1 000 feet deep. The walls are generally vertical but in one or two places it is possible to descend. When workers are engaged in collecting sulphur machinery is used to hoist them up and down. From Popo's summit there is a glorious prospect, not alone of the immense crater but of the beautiful White Lady (Iztaccihuatl) reclining a thousand feet below, of Orizaba on the far horizon and of the charming valley of Mexico.—Annie S. Peck in Christian Herald.

Rapid Fire Romance

Here is the 1912 model love story. R. W. Waters of Cincinnati forty four years old a clerk was a witness one morning recently in the divorce case of Clifford Brunk a friend. Later he took the stand as plaintiff in his own divorce suit and having obtained a decree he took out a license to marry Emma B Crotty of Newton O and the ceremony was performed by the Rev Gervaise Roughton at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. Mrs Crotty was divorced only a few days before.

Points for Mothers

For Overanxious Mothers

If overanxious young mothers only knew what to do first in the case of fevers and colds which attack their babies many and many a doctor's bill would be saved. With the high cost of living now confronting us this is an item to be considered.

Children have fever very easily consequently it has not as much significance as it has in the adult. But nevertheless even a slight fever caused by eating too much cake at supper must be watched or it may develop into a serious illness.

With the first signs of fever the flushed cheeks glittering eyes and hot dry skin it is usually safe to give a cathartic then stop any solid food and give an alcohol friction bath in the following manner. Remove all clothing and wrap a clean dry sheet or lightweight blanket around the child.

Expose one small portion of the body at a time beginning with the chest and apply equal parts of alcohol and water with the hand or a piece of absorbent cotton. Rub the dampened skin briskly but gently with the hand until it is entirely dry. Do not dry with a towel. Moisten the skin again and rub dry the second time and in this manner go over the whole body. Allow plenty of time for the skin to dry in the rubbing. This reduces the fever by the cooling effect of the rapid evaporation and the friction brings the blood to the surface in health giving circulation.

Allow the child to drink plenty of water unless there is excessive vomiting. Cold water helps to reduce the fever and carry off the poisonous products within the body.

If the fever has not been controlled within twelve hours and the mother does not know what causes it so that she may not cure it entirely she should not take the responsibility of treating the child herself but should send for the doctor so he may have a chance to prevent serious trouble.

Fever always appears with a cold. The best way to treat colds is to prevent them. To do this the child must have fresh air every hour of the day in all seasons. Avoid exposure direct drafts and wet feet.

Let it wear warm sensible clothing and give a cold sponge bath every day. Give only nourishing food plenty of sleep and routine exercise.

Suggestions For a Child's Room

There are many suggestions which are helpful in making the child's room the healthful cheerful aesthetic domain it should be. Above all things it should be simply furnished and the color pleasing and restful. A splendid idea was carried out successfully in a child's room. At one end of this room a platform raised one step above the level of the floor and extending about six feet from the wall was thickly padded with a material that toned in with the wall covering. This padding also extended up on the wall for about four feet thus protecting the child from all bumps and falls. Here he played all day beyond the reach of drafts and out of harm's way, says Harlan Thompson.

A few small rugs in front of the bed and chiffonier which covered the solid carpet were of the old fashioned kind woven from rags soft in color and having fanciful figures animals and quaint old houses woven into the border.

A charming screen covered with the child's best loved prints stood in one corner behind which were placed those toys which were not in use or those which had done duty during the day.

The furniture very simple in design was enameled in white or gray paint, which can easily be renewed and the curtains clung softly to the windows, reaching only to the sash and were so arranged that they could be removed easily and washed often.

Pedagogically it is better to have some few good permanent pictures on the walls (a good head of George Washington a beautiful Madonna depicting the ideal mother love and good reproductions of some of the masters) and others that can be replaced as the child's tastes change and as his interests deepen than to place permanent daubs of Mother Goose pictures or unreal animals poorly drawn which he must look at day after day whether he grows tired of them or not.

After all the child's room is his kingdom. Here he works and plays and he should find freedom and happiness and if the feeling of charm and peace prevails then unconsciously he receives his first premonition of beauty of form and color and proportion.

Pies For the Children

The indigestion of one's children is continually the concern of mothers. The best qualities of food and sterilized milk may form the diet and yet there is trouble. Only too often the difficulty lies not with the diet but with bad mental conditions physical fatigue or chills. Mothers should never reprimand the children about table manners while at the table but give instructions at some other time and let the children practice at each meal. While it is not good to pamper young tastes nevertheless indigestion will result when a poor unhappy child is commanded to swallow what it does not want.

Men grumble because God puts thorns on roses. Would it not be better to thank God that He has put roses on thorns?—Anon.

Wright-Metzler's—Pure Foods.

The High Cost of Living Is Directly Counteracted By the Way You Purchase Your Food Supply.

To lower the prices on luxuries does not necessarily lower the high cost of living, but to lower er prices on necessities such as pure, wholesome foods—which we all must have—is a direct relief.

The National Bureau of Statistics states that the American dollar today, as compared with 1897 is worth only 70 cents. This is a direct loss in ts purchasing power of three-tenths, a trifle less than a third.

Now the direct saving each week in this pure food grocery brings the average to fully 33⅓ cents on every dollar expended in a month's time.

In other words, instead of your dollar beisg worth only 70 cents as compared with 1897, it is worth, here, a full hundred cents and more. —And the quality of food is better.

How Can We Sell Foods So Low in Price?

A fair question that will receive a fair answer. In the first place we buy for two stores and get a bottom price and assured quality on big purchases. In the second place there's "running expenses" that the customer must pay for in the average, exclusive grocery.

Here, by department arrangement, such expenses are divided equally in the store. In the third place, competition, run mad, has forced inferior foods on the market. The tinkling cymbal of low price is depended on to carry the fraud goods into use. When you encounter low prices in foods be sure there's a reason behind it. Some one may still ask: "Granted your ability to sell low, why not mark your goods to conform to the prices elsewhere? I understand that is what all stores do."

Perhaps they do. We do not. We are merchants, not speculators. We sell as we buy. If we buy low we sell low. No matter what the market, we sell as low as conditions permit.
